

DAO Guide 17-12-2025:

Blockchain technology is innovative and exciting; at its core lies a decentralized system that operates without a central authority. However, blockchain apps span way beyond finance, most recently being applied to decentralizing governance and organizations.

DAOs aren't subject to central, top-down leadership by corporate leaders or other third-party decision-makers. Let's get real; none of us likes to be told what to do by conglomerate shareholders. Especially when it comes to our hard-earned money!

In a DAO, decisions are made from the ground up. Governed by a community (a group of awesome people like you and me) organized around a specific set of rules all coded on the blockchain. Thus – 100% transparent and community-driven.

Very simply, DAOs are a modern version of online communities that happen to share one bank account. Where members vote to decide how on raising and distributing funds. In contrast, critical decisions of today's financial institutions, like our banks. For example, are taken at the top of the hierarchy, often passing through several tiers of leadership before reaching our personal financial affairs.

AMM (automated market maker) DAOs use smart contract protocols to bring decentralized financial services to users.

MakerDao is widely known to be the first-ever protocol DAO. Launching the DAI stablecoin and forever changing DeFi as we know it. Currently, the MakerDAO project is one of the most successful and innovative apps on Ethereum, with almost 1000 projects integrating DAI into their own unique apps.

You might have heard some of the other heavy hitters too: SushiSwap, UniSwap, even Compound, and Aave Protocols. These DEXs (decentralized exchanges) serve as crypto exchange aggregators. Meaning they are constantly searching for market liquidity from a bunch of different DEXs. In this way, traders receive lower token swap rates than they could get using just one single DEX.
