

The Ultimate NFT Toolkit 18-02-2026:

It's time! You've been thinking about it for months and finally, you're charged and ready to buy your first NFT! But suddenly, you find yourself scratching your head, thinking "Wait a second...where do I start?" – don't worry, we have just the thing for you.

With NFTs, context is everything, but it can be hard to locate an overview of everything that's going on. Luckily for you, an introduction to the Web 3.0 ecosystem is at your fingertips with news sources such as NFT Evening providing credible information free of cost. NFT news platforms like NFT Evening are valuable because they provide an overview of the industry and key events, as well as a starting point for finding projects that you may be interested in.

Additionally, they also provide a calendar for upcoming NFT drops and conferences, useful for timing your purchase if you're looking to mint directly from a project, and to find opportunities to rub shoulders with the main voices in the industry. Even if you're looking to buy your NFT on a secondary marketplace instead of minting directly, understanding the key news events in the industry will stand you on good ground for understanding the bigger picture and making informed decisions.

For a simple and digestible look at the space and upcoming collections, as well as key information about the industry as a whole, an NFT news platform is your go to.

OK so you've identified a few projects that seem interesting, and you'd like to know more about them. Your next step should be some deeper research.

The project white paper should be your first point of call – here, you'll find clear information about the overall mission of the project, its key utilities (a very important point beyond the aesthetic of the NFTs), planned token supply and use cases. This is the "story" and intention of the project. Once you know this, it's time to check out how well it's actually performing. Check out data-tracking sites like Icy Tools, which provide real time information on how well a project is doing by tracking key metrics like floor price, collection value over time and trading volumes.
