

What Are Tokenized Equities? 03-02-2026:

Stock trading hasn't fundamentally changed in decades, which makes many of its features feel outdated in today's super-connected online world. The majority of stock markets operate within a strict schedule, typically observing the business hours of the locales in which they are based, and remain closed throughout weekends and national public holidays.

Tokenized equity changes all these. By wrapping traditional stocks in blockchain infrastructure, tokenized equities create a parallel market that trades continuously and settles instantly. It also opens access to anyone with an internet connection and a crypto wallet.

Tokenized equities are digital assets that represent ownership or a stake in a company, with this ownership recorded on a blockchain network. They are designed to track the value and performance of the underlying company shares. Simply, tokenized equity is a form of a tokenized asset, which is a unique digital representation of financial instruments that trade on a blockchain instead of a traditional brokerage.

Simply put, each token is backed 1:1 by actual shares held in a regulated custody. Therefore, when the actual share value appreciates or declines, the value of the token also changes. You can think of owning a tokenized equity as equivalent to owning a digital certificate representing a claim to the actual real-world asset (RWA) – an asset class within blockchain representing the digital tokens of tangible and intangible assets existing in the physical world.

Whereas tokenized stocks specifically refer to the tokenized stocks of publicly traded company shares, tokenized equities encompass multiple classes of RWAs such as shares, real estate, stakes in private companies, and other financial instruments. Because their issuance and management are onchain, the underlying infrastructure facilitates more flexible trading options. This includes the ability to transact outside of regular stock market hours.
