

What is Cronos? 25-12-2025

What do Paris St Germain, the Philadelphia 76ers, the Montreal Canadiens, Fox Sports, Formula 1 and UFC all have in common? They're all being sponsored by blockchain behemoth Crypto.com, the platform aiming to accelerate crypto mass adoption through its network Crypto.org Chain.

With its arsenal of well known partners, there's a good chance you've already spotted a Crypto.com logo as you watched your favourite sport. But if you're not a sports fan, or you're still not sure exactly who they are, you're in the right place.

Crypto.com started life in 2016 as a crypto payment gateway, with the core proposition of accelerating the world's transition to cryptocurrency. The platform has since exploded in tandem with the crypto marketplace to become one of the sector's biggest names, offering an exchange, a range of DeFi services, including crypto lending and borrowing, a non-custodial wallet and even its own NFT marketplace.

Crypto.com seeks to overcome this problem by using a blockchain (Crypto.org Chain) designed to enable direct crypto to fiat payments to be made instantly, and with negligible transaction fees. This is achieved by using the network's native token, CRO, as a settlement asset, allowing users to quickly and easily make regular purchases using crypto.

CRO tokens run on a proof-of-stake consensus protocol – as you might already know, this means you can stake your own CRO tokens to help the network operate securely, and receive rewards over time. If you're not familiar with this process, think of it as buying shares in a business to allow it to pay for essential maintenance, and then receiving dividends. And since Crypto.com rewards scale increases greatly for larger stakes, there's a lot to be gained from doing so.

CRO tokens have an important role in their ecosystem, not only incentivizing the security of the network but also functioning as a settlement asset to enable the incredibly fast transactions.
