

What Is Token Gating 08-03-2026:

Token-gating is a way Web3 communities can create value for their community by giving holders access to exclusive content, events, and other benefits. Perhaps the most common example of token gating is ‘holders only’ Discord channels, with private channels within a public server. But actually, there are many other experiences that token gating can offer. This can include anything from token gated store fronts, to metaverse events, and even IRL experiences.

Tokens are digital assets that live on a specific blockchain. Instead of having their own network, like coins, tokens are stored on other blockchains. Because they use a token standard, all of the tokens on a given blockchain are interoperable, as long as they come in the same format. Tokens come in two main forms; fungible (such as ERC-20 tokens) and non-fungible (NFTs).

Web3 communities will use a blockchain app and these tokens to token-gate their experience. To explain, blockchain apps operate via smart contracts. This smart contract is like the blockchain’s version of a computer program, and it executes using a predetermined set of conditions—conditions which can include the status or contents of a user’s wallet. So, when a token holder connects their wallet to a blockchain app or dApp, it will prompt them to sign a gasless transaction. This essentially proves this person owns the private key attributed to that account. Then since the blockchain is transparent and public to everyone, the platform can also verify that a specific account holds the necessary token. Next, it’s important to note you can also token-gate online experiences. There are many forms of token-gated experiences available; from token-gated metaverse spaces, to online seminars and community meetups. For example, both The Sandbox and Decentraland metaverses have exclusive areas that only allow holders of specific tokens. Thus, the platform will only allow users to enter if they have a specific token. This allows Web3 communities to create online and offline experiences which are only unlockable using a specific token—be it fungible or non-fungible.
