

What is Wilder World? 17-02-2026:

Frank Wilder is the enigmatic artist who made his name as a real-world sculptor and jewelry designer. His famous “totem” jewelry collection – designed digitally and rendered using a 3D printer – was an instant hit with names like Justin Beiber, Kevin Durant and Alicia Keys all putting Wilder on the map.

The artist’s latest project, Wilder World, was conceived from the ashes of the pandemic – with social and creative norms evolving, Wilder was acutely aware that the days of appreciating art in person were numbered. Virtual became the new “real” and Wilder World metaverse has emerged to answer the call for a new generation of digital art aficionados. Wilder World will begin with its first city, Wiami, a to-scale, digital replica of Miami, which is built to be the main residence to many zSpace citizens in the platform’s early stages. What Silicon Valley is to tech, Wiami is promising to be to Metaverse projects.

And the virtual town brings all the buzz of its IRL counterpart, with big names already signing up to be a part of the entertainment bill in the Magic City – Jake Paul will be one of the first to headline, with his upcoming boxing matches to feature within the platform. Wilder World’s emphasis is firmly on incredible aesthetics, and if you’re wondering how it’s achieving that, you have Unreal Engine to thank. Unreal Engine is an industry leading set of tools for designers looking to bring the highest level of realism and immersiveness to their experiences, and was enlisted by the Wilder World project to bring the project’s 5D vision to life.

The platform will also be interoperable, meaning it can be used with NFTs from projects across the ecosystem, giving users complete freedom to access both the game and its marketplace with their existing assets. With its focus squarely on design, and the Artist Guild driving the project forward, Wilder World has naturally been busy creating its own visually sumptuous NFT collections for users seeking something more than an in-game asset. Let’s check those out.
